129                    2015/01. THE ECONOMIST. Global markets. A tangle of anxieties. As markets slide, investors should worry more about some price drops than others. More benefits than problems (Russia and Venezuela problems, aside)?. [\[+\]](#)

122                    2014/10. THE ECONOMIST. Global property markets. Rising in 18 of the 23 economies. Prices in Spain, which had one of the biggest property bubbles before the crisis, are still falling (and 11% overvalued). Declining in France and Italy too. In contrast, housing markets are buoyant in some northern European countries, notably Britain and Sweden. See New 115. [\[+\]](#)
